

May 15, 2013

Mums want real help, not cash as a dangling carrot

The abolition of the baby bonus in the recent budget has garnered mixed reaction. Nicole Madigan thinks it matters less than the fact that governments seem to think cash is the only thing mums want.

Nicole Madigan

Writer

Nicole Madigan is a freelance journalist, writer and communications consultant. Having spent several years... Profile

Recent Articles

- Technology and kids don't mix. This will prove it
- In praise of praise
- Did a chiropractor really break a baby's back? 7 things parents must know

By now, every parent in Australia knows that last night's budget saw the abolition of the Baby Bonus.

The controversial scheme was first introduced by the Howard Government, underpinned by then-treasurer Peter Costello's infamous suggestion that families "have one for mum, one for dad and one for the country."

Designed to increase birthrates and ease the financial burden of having a child, the payment was made available to everyone, regardless of income.

The ALP quickly introduced means-testing, making the payment available only to families earning less than $150,000 per year.

Our mums are reviewing Garnier Micellar Cleansing Water
 Read Their Reviews >

christmas cooking for kids

How cricket just got fun for the whole family

WE RECOMMEND

- RELATED
- POPULAR
- RECENT

- 1 I escaped an abusive relationship and started my
- 2 Why does sex change after childbirth?
- 3 World's first surviving septuplets turn 18 years old!
- 4 Lib Dem Senator blasts parents for welfare payments
- 5 "If only I had never made Luke go to cricket training

Now, Treasurer Wayne Swan has announced that the Baby Bonus will be scrapped from March 1, 2014 (so currently expecting mothers will still receive the payment).

Instead, Family Benefit Tax A will be slightly increased, meaning low-income families will still receive some additional benefit.

Mums have mixed reactions

Reaction to the Baby Bonus's abolition has been mixed.

Some are glad to see the back of a payment viewed as "cash ploy" by the government designed to buy votes.

But others feel that if working parents can expect to be paid while they're enjoying time off with their child through Paid Parental Leave, then it's only fair for stay-at-home-mothers – already struggling on a single income – to receive a similar benefit.

"Some women are not eligible for paid parental leave and the baby bonus enabled them to stay home with their baby," said mum Rosa.

"I don't think anyone considers having a baby just to get $5k.

"If you believe that, then maybe the government should get rid of all policies for families because they get more from paid parental leave, family tax benefits, child care rebates etc."

They also reject the oft-heard rhetoric that payments are frequently wasted on flat-screen televisions and other non-necessities.

One mother said she used the payments to store cord blood, another said it made the difference between a public and private hospital. Others site IVF costs, nursery furniture and a general easing of the financial pressure brought about when a new baby arrives.

A pat on the head for mums

The extreme differences in the views of Australian mothers on a payment supposedly designed specifically for them is telling.

Coupled with the general confusion about entitlements, it begs the question – does the government have a real understanding of what families need? Do they even want to, or is it easier to simply move cash around, taking from some and giving to others?

When the Baby Bonus was first introduced, many viewed it as a metaphorical pat on the head for mums.

And now it's being ripped away as quickly as it was thrown at us.

Perhaps it's time for the government to stop using cash as a dangling carrot and start listening to the real needs and wants of all mothers, and create long term policies that truly benefit one of the most important demographics in our country.

o

1

Delta comforts strangers children on flight

o

2

Single mum aims to make mothers' lives easier

o

3

15 ways you can prepare your child for school!

o

4

Toddler life skills 101

o

5

How to survive Christmas with kids

More from Kidspot:

- Hey pollies, leave those kids alone
- Be careful about cutting the baby bonus
- Government parenting payments

More on the abolition of the baby bonus:

- Excessive baby bonus scrapped from The Australian
- Just 17 days to bang for your bucks from News.com.au
- Budget 2013: baby bonus and family fund hit from News.com.au

What do you think? Should the baby bonus have stayed?

PROMOTED STORIES

Aged 35 he speaks 11 languages - his 11 tricks on how to (Babel)

Why the Internet is Going Crazy Over this Mattress
(Casper)

Why Mattress Salesmen Hate This Sleep Startup
(Fortune)

The most addictive game of the year! Build your city!
(Forge Of Empires)

The most addictive game of the year! Play with 15 million
(Forge Of Empires)

Explosive Secret Police Tapes Blow Lid Off JonBenet
(Radar Online)

Scorned Ex Calvin Harris EXPOSES Taylor Swift's
(Radar Online)

Insanely popular game finally releases new (Elvenar)

Recommended by Outbrain

TOPICS

- BUDGET
- FEATURED
- NEWS

Loading comments...